NEW QUESTION: 3

Which of the following statements about asset-centric engineering is true?

- A. Asset-centric engineering requires that everything related to the assets, including metadata and payload, should be stored in the same repository.
- B. Asset-centric engineering promotes an integrated asset management approach in which assets are shared across the enterprise.
- C. Project assets are maintained at each individual project level in an asset-centric engineering.
- D. Asset-centric engineering uses multiple enterprise repositories to store and maintain the assets.

Answer: A

Explanation:

The underlying core principle of ORA Engineering is asset sharing and enterprise development through an integrated asset management approach. Most organizations use a Software Configuration Management (SCM) or Version Control System (VCS) for managing the code and configuration assets. These tools are great for managing the versioning of assets produced but they don't maintain the metadata of the assets. Without metadata assets are not organized in context and it is hard to discover them. ORA recommends an asset-centric engineering process, where an Asset Manager is used to address the challenges posed by the traditional approaches. The Asset Manager is typically an enterprise-scoped Metadata Repository working in concert with SCMs and other types of asset repositories.
