Several key statistics are used to evaluate the accuracy of a prediction using regression analysis. Which type of regression analysis descriptor BEST fits Standard Error?

- A. Compares the estimated and actual values of the Y dependent variable ranging from a value of 0 to 1.
- B. Represents a decreasing index of the reliability of the calculated result. It proves the 95% confidence level.
- C. Measures the standard deviation of variation of the observed value from the predictive value and determines error.
- D. Test for the accuracy of the regression equation. It represents the significance level at which the user would reject the regression as inaccurate.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Several key statistics are used to evaluate the accuracy of a prediction using regression analysis. Standard Error measures the standard deviation of variation of the observed value from the predictive value and determines error. Significant F tests for the accuracy of the regression equation. It represents the significance level at which the user would reject the regression as inaccurate. P-Value represents a decreasing index of the reliability of the calculated result. It proves the 95% confidence level.

R2 compares the estimated and actual values of the Y dependent variable ranging from a value of 0 to 1.
